

TRANSITIONAL WORDS

Transitions

These are words or phrases that help your sentences flow smoothly and enable your readers to follow your ideas easily. In addition to signaling order to your reader, transitional words can also link the sentences within a paragraph. By linking one sentence to another, they make the general statements more interesting.

Transitions that signal time or sequence order:

first	to begin with	in the past	in the morning	at breakfast
second	next	now, later	at noon	at lunch
third	then	soon	toward afternoon	at dinner
last	finally	in the future	by evening	at night

Transitions that signal space or location order:

at the top	in front of	on the left	near	among above	beyond	on the right	next, next to	inside, inside of against	in the distance	in the center	below	in back of alongside	inside, or inside of	outside of	to the right	under amid	at the bottom	in the back	throughout

Transitions that signal importance order or a sequence of events:

first	to begin with	for one thing	soon
second	first of all	in addition	later third	next	furthermore	also
after	as soon as	most important	most important of all finally	finally and most important	last and most important

Transition words or phrases can be utilized in other ways to add order, clarity, and coherence to your writing.

in other words	stated differently	for instance

When using transitions, remember to:

1. Choose the transition that best conveys your meaning.
2. Note that the transitional words or phrases do not always appear at the beginning of a sentence, but can be inserted wherever they seem appropriate.
3. When you have a transition at the beginning of a sentence, you should put a comma after it.
